JANUARY 2007

Security Tip of the Month

After computers and operating systems are developed, flaws are discovered. Hackers exploit these flaws to gain access to your computer. Software companies release patches to update and protect your system.

These patches are easy to download and install and in many cases, programs automatically download the patches for you. Check that the automatic update feature is enabled on your software. For information about enabling automatic updates, go to the program's Help menu and search for "automatic update." For those software programs that don't update automatically, visit the manufacturer's Web site for available versions and patches.

Keep your computer up-to-date, secure and running smoothly.
